The revised Burn Outcome System (BOs) was developed to provide a framework for the assessment of burn care. The system was designed to reflect the outcome measures of the UK's National Institute of Clinical Excellence (NICE) technology appraisal programme. In the UK, the NHS does not make decisions about the funding of health care based on cost-effectiveness. To provide the evidence base for these decisions, the National Burn Care Review is funded by the Department of Health and NHS England. The aim of this study is to report the findings of the first analysis using the BOs to examine the cost-effectiveness of burn care in the UK. This is an economic evaluation of current burn care using the BOs in England. A literature review was conducted to examine the cost-effectiveness of current care in the UK. The economic analysis was performed using BOs. The results were expressed as cost per outcome. In the UK, the analysis found that the cost of treatment for severely burned patients is proportionately much higher than other areas of health care. The mean cost per patient treated was £35,276.65 and £23,179.90 respectively for full thickness and superficial partial thickness burns. These figures compare favourably with the NICE recommendations for areas of care such as hip fractures and cataract surgery. The majority of cost differences are explained by the greater length of stay for severely burned patients. The BOs provide a framework that allows comparisons across burn services and highlights the differences in treatment compared to other areas of health care. In England, the cost of treating severely burned patients is higher than other areas of health care and the cost per patient treated compares favourably with other areas of care.In 2016, Utah, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and California passed laws to limit Medicaid funding for abortions. President Donald Trump on Monday said that he would go to court to overturn a ruling that protects a key Obamacare provision. "For the first time, ObamaCare is being ruled UNCONSTITUTIONAL by a District Judge," Trump tweeted. "If the ruling stands, the entire Affordable Care Act will be gone. Premiums will go up 350% (in some cases) & deductibles will go up with almost no coverage. Supremacy Clause!" He appeared to be referring to U.S. District
